ROAST 'POSSUM .- A friend living in Tennessee has promised to send us a prime, fat 'possum. Even now it is probably on the road hither—maybe sleeping the blockade on the railroad. A colored expert from the same State then encountered or that he ever dreamed of. A persimmon tree waved its branches over the cabin in which he was born, and until he had been long away from his native State, a country was valuable in his eyes only in accordance with the 'possum-producing ca-pabilities. When we told this ex-dled in him and blazed out through his expanded eyes. He was back in Tennessee in a moment. His faithful old 'possum dogs, "Tige" and "Bose," were again by his side. The dew of the evening lay thick on the leaves, brought to the ground by the first frosts; a veil of mist hung above the swamp, and the light of the "jack" flashed and danced in the fishing canoe far down the river. The repetition of our question roused him from his reverie and he was all business: "Can I question to ax me? When dat air 'possum comes you jes bring um ot me, dat's all! Will I roast dat wid dar noses in de air a-trackin' up de smell ob dat 'possum! Now you'd jes better ax me can I roas' a 'possum. Jes Fotch along de possum—lem me see him!"-

"Of angels?" queried I.
"Better than that; more dear to me Than angel ministry."

"Dreaming of me," my vain heart cried,
"Of me, her all in all,"
But soon the bright illusion died,
And heart had such a fall

"I thought a fairy came," she said, "And spread before my eyes Such lovely satins, silks and shawls, As filled me with surprise.
